Laura Boffo
The medium is the message: words on stone in the Greek world

The epigraphic habit, a distinctive mark of the ancient "Greek" civilization, was the preferred mean to transmit public and private messages in the Mediterranean world. The analysis of some noteworthy documents of the Anatolian area will point out several aspects of such medium, which went beyond his subject and the literacy level of its audience, and represented a unitary system of values affecting the different ethnic groups of this region.